DESCRIPTION:  The General Internal Medicine rotation is a three-week rotation. During this time the student will be functioning at the level of a subintern, taking admissions independent of the interns on the team. As a subintern, the student will work directly under the supervision of the senior resident and attending on service. During this time, the student will learn about pathology and will work with a very diverse patient population. The teaching is outstanding at our facility. The student’s responsibilities will be similar to that of the interns on the team, but the student will carry fewer patients than the interns. The subintern will also get to work with third-year students and have an opportunity to teach. The overall experience is rated very high.
